Nick Haigh (Woodland Trust)

The Project

The Smithills NFM project is a partnership between The Woodland Trust and Environment Agency, and utilised funds from the DEFRA Flood Defence Grant in Aid Catchment Scale Programme aimed at delivering innovative natural flood management (NFM) to reduce flood risk and deliver additional multiple benefits for biodiversity, land management and hydrological monitoring. In combination with an HLF funded project on the wider estate, the project was delivered via a collaboration of partners including the Mersey Forest for delivery, University of Liverpool for monitoring and analysis, Moors for the Future Partnership (MFFP) on the moorland restoration, Greater Manchester Ecology Unit (GMEU) for ecological expertise and Natural Course for support in dissemination.

NFM intervention examples to be seen on the day include in-stream 'living' woody dams, offline storage bunds, moorland restoration, stone dams, tree-planting and culvert daylighting. Evidence from local specific examples of the impact of the additional 12,000 m<sup>3</sup> of additional storage capacity will be presented, as well as the habitat benefits, and the visit will also cover the practicalities and legislative requirements associated with NFM delivery.
